With the rapid development of technology, it is easier to use electronic products than before. More and more people pay a lot of attention to their smartphones; hence, there are many social websites show up like Facebook, Line or even Instagram and all of them are trying to occupy the network business market. By the global trend, a video app named Youtube appeared and invited actors, musicians and so on to upload their videos and get the money by the watching times. As a result, it has been all the rage and attracts millions of fans and audiences to watch and upload their own videos to become a youtuber. People can upload various videos like a math lesson, a lesson to learn code and even a talkshow to share the fun with each other.

However, there are some pros and cons of being a self-media and how it influence the society. First, you can earn nearly ten thousand dollars just by uploading a five-minutes video to Youtube. You can also get an extra money by how many people subscribe you. Hence, it can become a kind of job for you to do. Second, you can work from home and have a lot of free time to arrange your own schedule and you won't worry about the report deadline or even be scolded by your manager. Third, your opinions may be important to the society and play the critical role since a large amount of people will believe in what you said without thinking by themselves. Besides, you have to be a good model for children to learn because children are easier to learn from the ideas than any other people. You also have to talk and show some positive concepts and values to influence the society. You are always asked to talk about your opinions on the headlines and breaking news.

Furthermore, I found that there are many youtubers were scolded and bullied by the Netizen on the net without any reason. It may cause negative effects to the youtubers and even the society that people are worried to talk and show their own opinions in public for fear of the criticism from others. Some people even start a classroom to discuss about their friendship, love or even their privacy. Besides, the information uploaded to the youtube would be seen by everyone in self-media era. It may be dangerous to upload the video you dare not to show to others because everyone can see all the videos by using the self-media.

All in all, as long as you use self-media, you can be the you-tuber and have the power to change the society by twittering and showing your comments. Self-media has been famous around the world and has the power to impact the society's policy, politic and even economy but how to use it wisely has become an important issue for every country's citizen to pay attention and discuss. No matter you want to contribute your valuable opinions to society, using the self-media can record your daily life to share it and have fun with your best friends and family members. Every one can be the influential and critical role in our society by self-media.
